EDITORIAL

For as long as I can remember sports was in my life... I grew up on the south side of Chicago playing everything from organized sports, such little league and flag football to neighbor sporting events like strike out, 'get back,' running bases, and kick baseball, to name a few. A lot of these names may not be familiar with you, but I'm certain, if you grew up in an urban area, you are familiar with the games.

Take for example running bases. . . this game consisted of mark space in front of someone's house using the lines etched in the concrete sidewalk where two people played catch while several other people ran between them (i.e., running the bases). The pure objective of this game was to run as fast as you could between the two people playing catch without being tagged out. People slid on half concrete half sidewalk trying to avoid being tagged out. And if you were tagged out, well, you would have to leave the game until all players were out. Believe it or not, it was hours of fun.

As I got older, my love of sports grew stronger not from participation but from the business side. . . what makes some organizations more popular and successful while others fail. Why isn't this team getting coverage of their event? How many times have you witnessed your team or a student-athlete do something outstanding, but didn't receive any coverage?

Too often our children are brought to task for mistakes and mis-steps, and all too seldom receive praise for a job well done. We also feel that the so-called mainstream media tends to focus on the negative events surrounding our youth, so we hope to use our venue to praise, inspire, encourage and enrich our youth of today.

Well, this is where my vision meets the need. Amateur Sports News Network (ASNN) was born purely out of love of sport and trying to assist even the simplest event with some necessary exposure without being bias or cynical. In order to achieve our mission and vision, we plan to provide the Chicagoland area with an ultimate gameday experience including highlighting local athletes, organizations, fans, parents, businesses, etc via streaming video and audio, articles, and blogs leveraged by technology.

ASNN understands that no one goes it alone. . . Thus, we have incorporated an online community in order to highlight local athletes and organizations / programs in a manner they have not received. Our site is truly designed for a place where the fan meets journalism - where the Monday morning quarterback meets the press box! We have created an online community where you, the fan or the athlete or the organization are encouraged to create and critique sports via our venue. If you would like to join our team, click here.

"I have always had a passion for sports. I invite you to join ASNN in highlighting student-athletes and organizations on our state-of-the-art website while we provide a media venue to showcase their talents," said Editor in Chief of ASNN, Steven Fitch. "ASNN will deliver an energetic, non-bias coverage of real-life stories of amateur student-athletes and organizations in the Chicagoland area. We recognized that we are not a sports magazine about people, we are a people magazine about sports. And when you partner with us, EVERYBODY wins!"

This is your chance to get our kids, communities and your stories told. With collective participation, we can showcase and encourage our kids to continue to strive for the very best life has to offer them. Thus, we have adopted the following slogan moving forward, "Here is your opportunity to stop hating the media and actually become it!"

If you have would like to submit a topic, story, idea, etc... contact us at 708.201.1781 or by e-mail info@asn365.com

GIRL TALK

This section is specifically designed as a platform for girls to discuss just about any topic they would like facing them in sports today. Every since Title IX, the number of high school girls who participate in sports has gone from 1 in 27 to 1 in 2.5. In the same time period, the number of high school boys who participate in sports has remained at 1 in 2.<sup>2</sup>

Additionally, the numbers of boys and men playing high school and college sports have increased as well since Title IX. In high schools, close to 4 million young men now participate in sports; almost 400,000 more than did in 1972. In colleges, over 200,000 men compete in athletics; 30,000 more than did in 1972. There are 215 more men's college baseball teams and 248 more men's college basketball teams than there were in 1982.<sup>3</sup>

What does sports do for women? Besides regular exercise...

- may decrease a woman's risk of breast cancer
- increases self esteem
- increases confidence
- increases a woman's bone mass and decreases her chance of osteoporosis

Women and girls who participate in sports...

- have higher grades than students who don't
- have lower drop out rates
- have lower pregnancy rates
- are less likely to use drugs
- are more likely to graduate college
- learn skills that will help them all of their lives<sup>3</sup>

Title IX's still has work to do...

- Women make up 54% of college students and only 43% of college athletes.<sup>1</sup>
- Title IX compliance has been driven by law suits and threats of law suits. Although the law states that schools that violate Title IX will lose their federal funding, in thirty years no school has ever lost federal funding for not complying with Title IX.
- Male college athletes receive 36% more scholarship dollars than female college athletes at NCAA institutions.<sup>1</sup>
- Men's college athletics receive more money than women's in scholarships, recruiting, head coach salaries, and operating expenses.<sup>1</sup>
- Men have substantially more employment opportunities than women in college sports. Women are 16.9% of the Athletic Directors, 44% of the head coaches of women's teams, 2% of the head coaches of men's teams, and 27.8% of the full time athletic trainers.<sup>1</sup>

For more facts on Title IX and athletic participation, go to www.ncwge.org or www.nwlc.org, or www.womenssportsfoundation.org.

Title IX of the Higher Education Amendments of 1972 and its 1975 regulations protect against sex discrimination in athletics as well as many other aspects of education. This important federal education policy has been a major influence in increasing athletic opportunities for girls and women in informal recreational sports as well as in competitive athletic programs. Information on the history and continued challenges related to the use of Title IX to advance gender equity in athletics and sports is covered in:
